My name is Jessica Bespalko. I'm 20 years old. I'm from Roseville Michigan. I have concerns for my generation and future generations saturating the planet with wireless technology, which hasn't been proven to be safe, and in fact there has been growing evidence of potential health risks. Do we really want to take risks with young people that are not fully developed and with our pets and all animals not knowing how this is affecting them and our planet in general with this mass exposure? And how about the bees that are so important to our future food supply? There is some evidence this technology could be effecting them. Is it wise for everyone to be guinea pigs in a huge scientific experiment? Families like mine should have the right to preserve our perfectly working analog meter which performs the same as the advanced meter if we choose and people after getting a new meter that decide its not working out well for them should have the right to revert back to an analog meter. Even better, this whole experiment should be reversed until complete safety and privacy can be proven. In addition, I am ashamed that our government was willing to use our tax dollars to fund installation of a privacy invading, class 2b carcinogen on every building in America. Our freedom is being taken away from us and this is crossing the line.
